New Standards for Success in Esthetics;
21st Century Laboratory Communication and Smile Design

Abstract: The days of noting on a lab slip: "please make an esthetic crown - shade A2" are far behind us. Contemporary standards of care in esthetic dentistry dictate optimal outcomes. In this high stakes arena, communication between the doctor and their most invaluable ally, the technician, is at an all-time premium.

This 2-hour course will review the historical/ analogue strategies of laboratory communications and discuss which of these still have value or merit. Most critically, the audience will be exposed to the digital advances that have moved laboratory communications to a new standard. Topics like smile design and case presentation, case planning and deployment, shade mapping and selection, and general improvements in results through accurate data collection and communication will be presented and explained via actual case reviews.
